A Field Work on the River Jalangi- Iron and Arsenic Content

Introduction:

River water pollution is a major concern all over the world. River water is the main source of fresh water but its uncontrolled pollution is resulting in scarcity of fresh water at an alarming rate. Heavy metals like arsenic and iron are one of major river pollutants. The addition of these heavy metals can occur both naturally as well as in man-made ways. The leaching of minerals from soil layers specifically increases the iron and arsenic contents in rivers. The state of West Bengal in India suffers from toxic levels of arsenic and iron in underground water. These underground water levels are maintained by the nearby rivers. So, it is important to analyze the iron and arsenic contents of rivers so that the people depending on these rivers could be made sufficiently aware of the risks and help them find alternative water resources. In this fieldwork, we made a case study on the River Jalangi- Iron and arsenic content.

The geographic location of the river:

Jalangi is a moribund river of 233 km in length in the Bhagirathi-Hooghly basin covering the districts of Nadia and Murshidabad in West Bengal. The Jalangi leaves the Ganges or Padma at the extreme north of the Nadia district at 24°05'26'' N and 88°41'53'' E and joins the river Bhagirathi at Swarupganj (23°24'42'' N and 88°22'50'' E), opposite Nabadwip, the birth-place of Sri Chaitanya. In our report, we have covered the river from the Tehatta Ghat to Chander Ghat which is in the close vicinity of our college, Government General Degree College, Tehatta, Nadia.

Flora and fauna of the river:

The Jalangi river has quite a rich biodiversity. According to the reports of Ray and Pal, more than thirty-five numbers of fish species are present in the river. These are rohu, catla, Nile tilapia, Indian tilapia, cheetal, peacock eel etc. Apart from huge diatoms present the river, Jalangi contains Anabaena cylindrica, Anabaena azollae, Anabaenopsis sp., Cladophora sp., Spirogyra sp., Ulothrix sp., Stauroneis sp., Nitzschia sp., Nostoc sp., etc. These algae provide a huge amount of food and environment for growing a large number of species of fish present. Eelgrass (Vallisneria sp.) is available at Jalangi. Three species of dragonflies such as Scarlet Skimmer (male and female), Ditch Jewel and Long-legged Marsh Glider are found in the vicinity of Jalangi River. Two species of damselflies (Blue River damsel and Coromandel Marsh Dart) are also reportedly found.

Role of the river in the lives of local people:

The river is the chief source of irrigation for the local farmers. The districts of Nadia and Murshidabad produce large amounts of jute, rice, wheat, and mustard seeds. Most farming lands lie along the banks of the river. The river is also used for decomposing the jute fibers. Villagers also use the river water to meet their daily essential activities like bathing and washing. The large varieties of fish act as a source of livelihood for a large number of fishermen.

Level of iron and arsenic in the river water:

Description of sample and location	Water quality parameters	Observed value ($\mu\text{g/L}$)	Recommended value as per Indian standard ($\mu\text{g/L}$)
River water sample	Arsenic (As)	20	10
Location: Jalangi	Iron (Fe)	400	300

Threats caused by the presence of excess iron and arsenic in the river water:

High iron in water can cause diabetes, hemochromatosis, stomach problems, and nausea in humans. It can also damage the liver, pancreas, and heart. Iron causes damage to buildings, pipes, utensils, and bathroom fittings causing a lot of economic loss. Arsenic on the other hand causes cancer of the skin, lungs, and bladder. The presence of these heavy metals also has resulted in reduced farming yield which leads to the application of more chemical fertilizers causing even further pollution.

Conclusion:

The presence of iron and arsenic in amounts which is greater than the permissible limit is a serious issue. The residents need to be made aware of this fact so that they adopt means to remove the arsenic and iron from the water before using it whether for personal purposes or for farming purposes. Government can take the initiative to install iron removal plants in villages. Drinking water should be purified before supplying to households. Also, regular surveys need to be carried out to investigate the iron and arsenic levels in the river.
